

COMMENT OF
THE DAY

Civic Association
Enters Politics

THE Civic Association has decided to throw its hat into the local political arena. It is an interesting but not surprising development. It might almost be described as evolutionary. During its first 14 months of existence the Association has contented itself with quiet, behind-the-scenes enquiries, surveys and investigations touching on matters affecting the welfare of the general public and through memoranda to Government and releases to the newspapers has kept officialdom and the community acquainted with its activities and its opinions.

This has served a quite useful purpose, for much of the Association's work has been painstaking and wholly objective. Not all the research work has disclosed original or unknown data, but there has been a commendable sense of perspective about the reports, and it is a fair claim that the Association, particularly during 1955, has gained public recognition and prestige.

SOME may regret that the Association, from being an independent, non-political guardian of public interests, is now to become a political entity, with its attendant dangers of narrow partisanship. Nevertheless, it would appear that the days of the unofficial "advisory" organisations are numbered in Hongkong. Time was when they flourished—the Kowloon Residents' Association (still functioning), the Peak and Mid-Levels Residents' Associations and the Cheung Chau Residents' Association (all three defunct).

In their self-imposed limited fields of activity, these organisations over the years fulfilled useful functions in the interests of the community, but they often suffered the frustration of a courteous hearing from Government minus official implementation of their ideas and proposals.

Today, in Hongkong, there is more civic consciousness; the general public are more and more aware of what they consider to be their social rights, and seek a slightly louder voice in affairs which affect their daily lives.

Government, on its part, has paralleled this development by considerably enlarging the scope and functions of the Urban Council; has widened the electorate and increased the size of the Council by additional elected representatives. Thus it is that organisations, whose declared objects and reasons are the safeguarding and nurturing of the interests of the community as a whole, find it necessary to seek elected representation on the Urban Council.

IT would appear that political parties, based on those to be found functioning in the municipalities of Britain, are now inevitable in Hongkong. The prospect need not frighten or dismay the public. At the moment there are two such parties—the Reform Club and the Civic Association. But their aims and ideals are basically the same; they both sincerely seek to bring about better health and welfare conditions for the populace. Their objectives, when considered in long-term perspective, need cause no affront.

At the next Urban Council elections the Civic Association, as a political body, will compete with the Reform Club. This will at least help to enliven the proceedings; should definitely encourage a larger turnout of voters on polling day, and will conceivably effect a further leavening of a Council whose importance to the community is constant growing.

Israel And Egypt Gird Themselves For Any Emergency

BEN GURION'S POLICY ENDORSED

Vote Of Confidence From Party ASSUMES FULL RESPONSIBILITY

Tel-Aviv, Dec. 29. Premier David Ben Gurion's political party today voted new confidence in his stand against the Arabs after a three-day "emergency" party meeting called by his critics.

As tension along Israel's borders increased during recent weeks, criticism against 69-year-old Ben Gurion's policy rumbled beneath the political surface.

The criticism was directed mainly against Ben Gurion and his own Defence Minister. He customarily exercises certain powers in security matters without consulting his cabinet.

The three-day closed meeting of the Mapai party studied a comprehensive plan of the present emergency—compiled by former Defence Minister Pinhas Lavon, reliable sources said.

It is believed that the Premier's critics within the party took the opportunity to challenge Ben Gurion's line of action against the Arabs.

The result was that Ben Gurion demanded his party's full confidence. It was believed that he personally took responsibility for Israel's action against Syria at Lake Tiberias where more than 50 Syrians died.

Peace Proposals Accepted

Ben Gurion himself, and Sharet, opened the discussion with reference to economic and political problems, the sources said, but the meeting soon moved on to "preparedness for an emergency."

Ben Gurion came out of retirement at his lonely sheep ranch to lead his country once more in meeting what the Jews consider an Arab threat to their survival.

The endorsement of Ben Gurion followed yesterday's Foreign Ministry announcement that Israel feels that her acceptance of peace proposals from United Nations Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjöld, stood in contrast to "the Egyptian stand which was tantamount to their rejection."

Meanwhile, Egypt Gets More Arms

Cairo, Dec. 29. Czechoslovakia has provided Egypt with enough arms to enable it to meet any emergency in the near future, Colonel Osman Fawzi, the Egyptian military attache in Prague, said today.

Colonel Fawzi returned here to report to the government about the implementation of the Czechoslovak-Egyptian arms deliveries agreement.

KRUSHCHEV'S AMAZING APOLOGY

Paris, Dec. 29. Soviet leaders today made an apologetic gesture to Turkey, which went even further than the "mea culpa" they uttered to Yugoslav President Tito in Belgrade last summer.

The setting this time was the closing meeting of the Supreme Soviet in Moscow, where Communist Party chief, Nikita Krushchev, made a speech bristling with attacks on the West.

But when he came to the question of Soviet-Turkish relations, Krushchev provided the surprise of the day by declaring "The responsibility for the abnormal state of our relations cannot be attributed to Turkey alone. We, on our side, have made intolerable statements."

Krushchev added that the Soviet Government had "tried to correct this, but, have not obtained results."

Krushchev's statement was taken here to signify a repudiation of Soviet territorial claims on Izmir and Ardahan in northern Turkey near the Soviet border.

When the Soviet Communist Party chief made similar apologies for past Russian wrongs to Yugoslav leader, he blamed them on the "disregard and executed Soviet Minister of the Interior, Lavrenti Beria."

But today, the Soviet leader attacked no such source. —France-Press.

Mountbatten May Visit H.K. In 1956

London, Dec. 29. Admiral Lord Louis Mountbatten of Burma, First Sea Lord, is contemplating a tour of British naval bases in the Far East early next year, an Admiralty spokesman said today. On this occasion, Lord Mountbatten is likely to make an official visit to India, where he was the last Viceroy. Although the programme of the tour has not been fixed it is thought that Lord Mountbatten will leave in a few weeks' time. He will fly to Singapore and Hongkong. Lord Mountbatten has been First Sea Lord since last April. In October he went to the United States and Canada. —France-Press.

PLANE EXPLODES: 2 DIE

Dover, Ohio, Dec. 29. Two men were killed today when a two-engine private plane exploded, crashed and burned near here.

The state highway patrol identified the plane as the property of the Gulf Refining Company. First reports had said a four-engine plane was involved. Fire engines and an ambulance raced across rain-swept roads to the scene where two bodies were removed from the wreckage. —Reuter.

"Teddy Boys" Beat Up Indians

London, Dec. 29. A gang of young English thugs, dressed as "Teddy Boys", today beat up and robbed Indian customers of about 2,400 in an East London Indian cafe.

The "Teddy Boys" threatened their victims with knives and improvised weapons. Customers' descriptions of the young gangsters have enabled detectives to begin a search in the surrounding districts. —France-Press.

MISTINGUETT

Paris, Dec. 29. Mistinguett, once-time idol of French music halls, was reported tonight to be in a "stationary condition" after suffering a stroke on Christmas Eve. Physicians said that it would be several days before they could make any predictions about the 82-year-old star's chances of recovery. —France-Press.

EMBARGO LIFTING PROSPECTS DIM

Washington, Dec. 29. A highly placed United States official said today he expected the United States to resist any British pressure to ease restrictions on trade with Communist China at next month's Anglo-American "summit" talks in Washington.

Sir Anthony Eden, the British Prime Minister, and his Foreign Secretary, Mr Selwyn Lloyd, are due in Washington on January 30 for a five-day review on world problems with President Eisenhower and Mr John Foster Dulles, the Secretary of State.

The United States official was responding to a question at a press briefing on United States-Chinese relations about the possibility of a British proposal to ease the ban on strategic goods imposed by agreement on China during the Korean war.

The official replied that he had a great deal of sympathy for the United States stand against increasing trade with Communist China at this time. He said he could not see how the West could bargain with Peking authorities by giving them what they wanted in advance.

Turning to other areas of United States-Asian policy, the official predicted that Japan and the United States would this year be able to quickly work out agreement on Japan's contribution to the upkeep of United States forces stationed in Japan and the size of self-defence forces to be maintained by Japan.

CLOSE TOGETHER

Under the Japan-US peace treaty signed at San Francisco, in 1951, Japan agreed to contribute annually towards the cost of its defence. But the question of size of the Japanese contribution has caused trouble each year and for the past fiscal year took months of negotiation.

No formal negotiations have yet begun on Japan's 1956 contribution, the official said, but in preliminary exploratory talks the views of Japanese and American officials were close enough together to say that "something could be worked out pretty quickly."

Formal negotiations were expected to open soon. In response to further questions the official made these other points:

BETTER POSITION

1. Japan at the end of this year was in a better position than at the end of last year. Economically, Japan, through the efforts of government and industry, and the favourable world economic conditions, had been able to expand trade. Politically, Japan now had a two-party system and a government with a working majority that gave promise of the kind of political stability that was essential to Japan's further progress.

2. The United States had received no official intimation either from Japan or South Korea that they were arranging for talks to settle their several quarrels.

3. Tokyo has not yet formally asked the State Department to declare any replacement for the Ambassador, Mr Sadao Iguchi.

HOPEFUL PROSPECT

4. Barring deterioration of world economic conditions generally there now was a "hopeful" possibility that Japan's economic upturn would help solve such basic problems as feeding and providing for the dense Japanese population.

Ready For Jamboree

Melbourne, Dec. 29. Scouts of many nationalities mingled round camp fires tonight at Wozza Park at the foot of the dangerous ranges near Melbourne, the site of the largest pan-Pacific jamboree ever held in Australia.

By tonight 17,000 scouts from about 30 countries assembled at the camp in preparation for the official opening tomorrow by the Governor-General, Field Marshal Sir William Slim. —China Mail Special.

A Former Apprentice Rescues Company

Covenkry, Dec. 29. Sir William Rootes, British car manufacturer, today became chief of Singer Motors, where he began as a penny an hour apprentice after leaving school.

It was to save his old firm from folding up that Sir William Rootes decided to step in and offer to buy out shareholders.

At a stormy meeting here Singer shareholders agreed to accept the offer of £1,400,000 from the Rootes car group to take over the whole of their ordinary and preference stock. The offer was made partly in cash and partly in shares.

The Singer firm started by making bicycles for the kings and queens of Europe in the 1870s. And it grew to become one of Britain's leading car-making concerns. It now includes the Humber, Hillman and Sunbeam Talbot car companies.

Now the Singer cars will not vanish from the roads. Sir William Rootes has given his word that they will continue to be made. —China Mail Special.

More Yalta Secrets Revealed

Washington, Dec. 28.

The United States State Department tonight published previously secret papers relating to the controversial Big Four conference at Yalta in 1945, the last year of the war.

The documents provided fresh evidence that the wartime partnership between the Soviet Union and the United States began to disintegrate before the fighting ended.

Among them is a "secret and personal" message from Stalin to President Roosevelt indicating plainly that Stalin intended to have his own way about organizing a government for Poland.

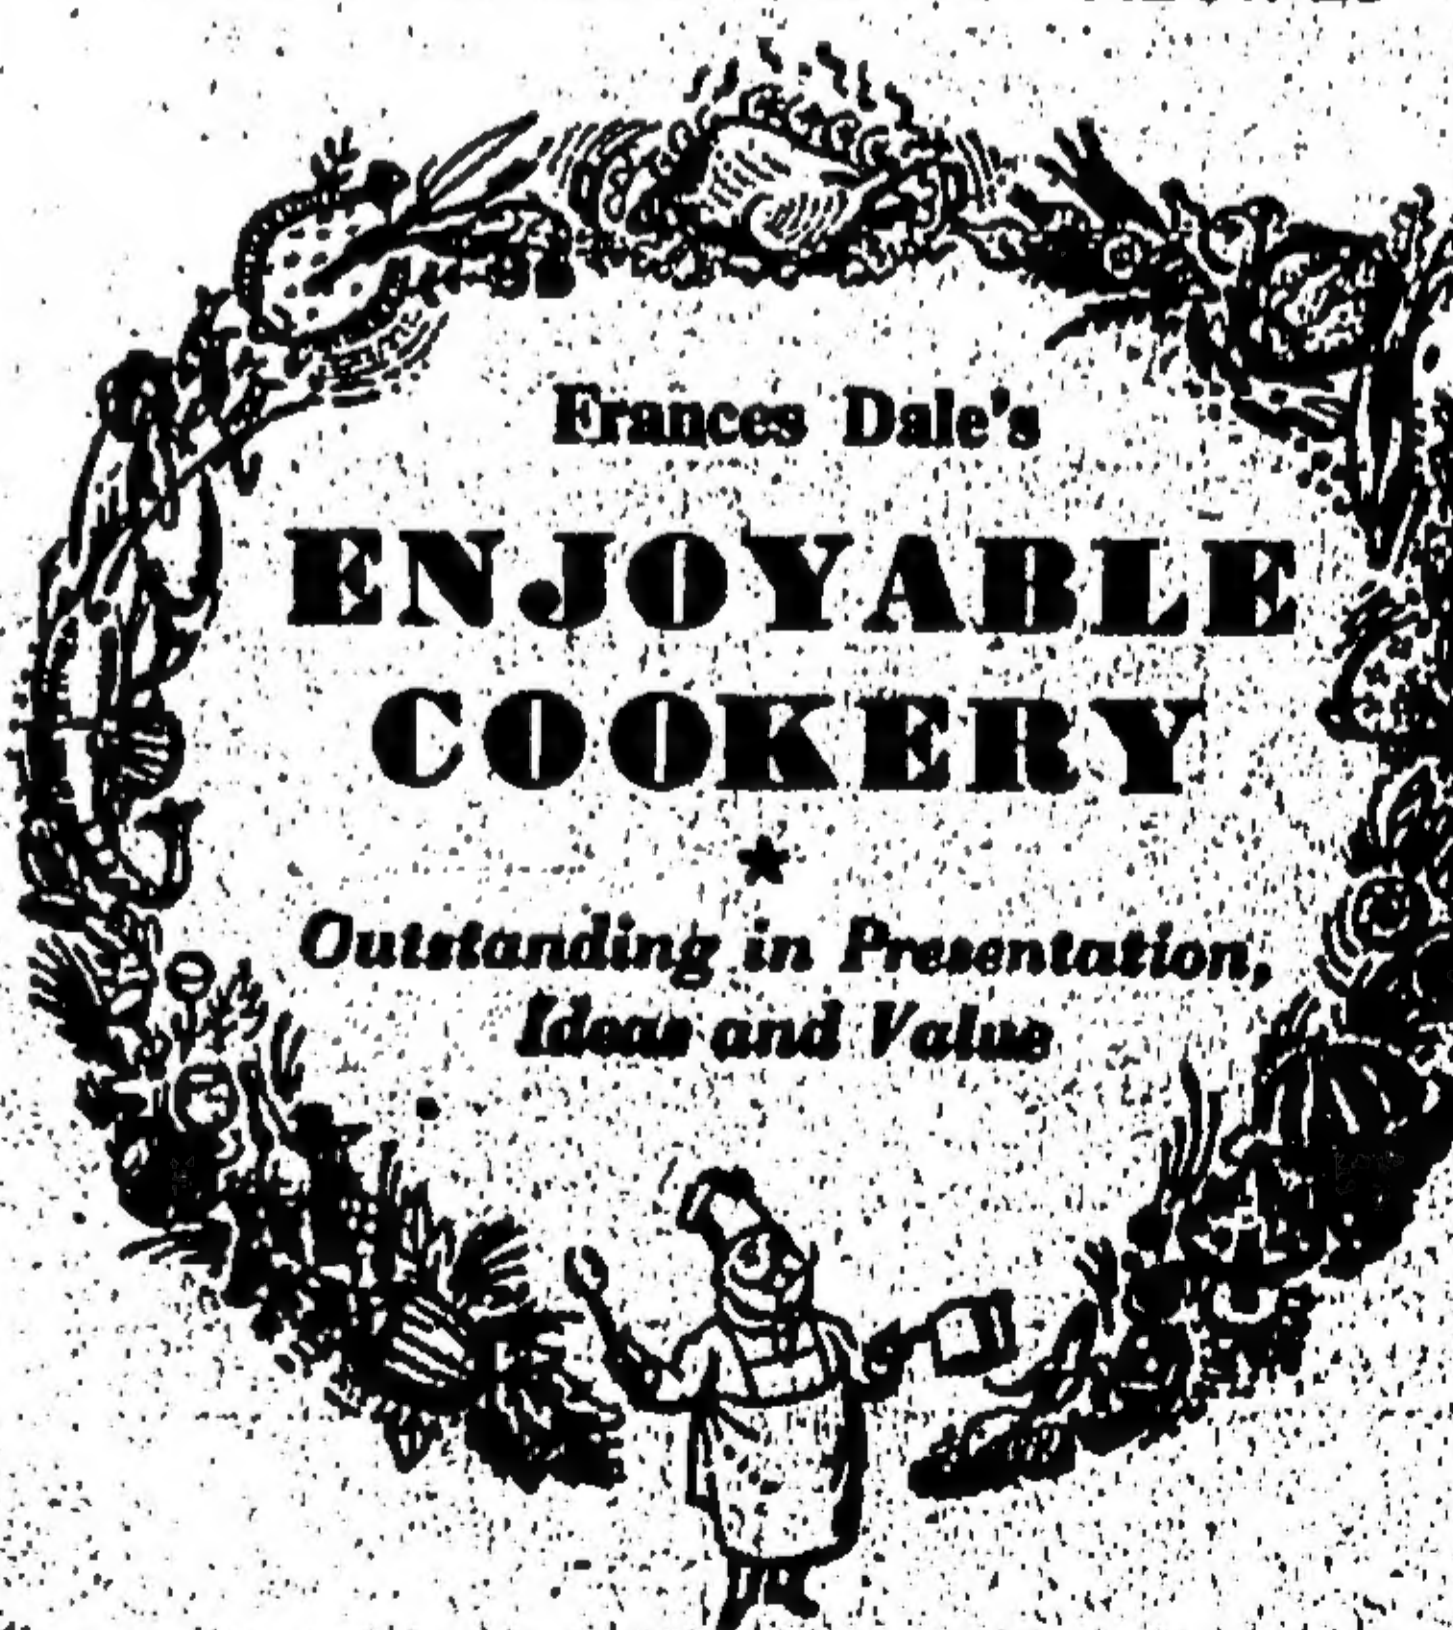

A dispute between Russia and the United States and Britain over the future of Poland was probably the first major conflict of the cold war.

Another message from Mr. Averell Harriman, then Ambassador in Moscow to President Roosevelt in April 1945, said an "accumulation of minor incidents" beginning immediately after the Yalta conference ended, contributed to concern over American-Soviet relations. He mentioned specifically Soviet resistance to a proposal for American "air teams" and a "naval team" to visit territory under Soviet control to inspect bomb damage.

Another message to President Roosevelt published today was from Mr. Patrick Hurley, then American Ambassador to China in February 1945. It contained a secret proposal for a meeting of Mr. Roosevelt, Sir Winston Churchill and General Chiang Kai-shek at New Delhi to clarify policies and strategies "and boost morale in the China theatre of war."

The newly disclosed documents are contained in a 1,032-page book, published by the State Department on "the conference at Yalta and Yalta 1945." —Reuter.

ENVOYS SUMMONED FOR URGENT TALKS IN LONDON

London, Dec. 29. Britain's whole Middle East policy—widely considered to have suffered major setbacks recently—will come under close scrutiny here next week when Mr Selwyn Lloyd, the Foreign Secretary, confers with British envoys in the area, diplomatic sources said today.

Mr Lloyd, appointed Foreign Secretary last week in Sir Anthony Eden's Cabinet reshuffle, is summoning eight envoys for urgent talks next Wednesday and Thursday.

Diplomatic sources said the talks would cover the whole range of current Middle East problems—particularly the recent Communist arms deal with Egypt, Britain's unsuccessful move to get Jordan into the five-nation Baghdad pact, which touched off violence in the Arab Kingdoms and the continued Arab-Israeli tension.

Chief Topics

The talks will give Mr Lloyd an up-to-date assessment of the critical Middle East situation before he accompanies Sir Anthony Eden to Washington later next month for discussions with President Eisenhower and Mr John Foster Dulles, United States Secretary of State.

The British diplomatic representatives at the Foreign Office meetings will be those accredited to Egypt, Iraq, Lebanon, Syria, Jordan, Israel, Saudi Arabia and the Persian Gulf area.

Diplomatic sources said these are likely to be the chief topics of their agenda:

★ 1. An assessment of the new "cold war" front the West considers Russia has opened in the Middle East with the Czech arms agreement with Egypt and Soviet "wooing" of other Arab states. These Russian moves have given Western diplomats their most severe jolt for years, since they have long regarded the area as a Western sphere of influence.

They charge that the Czech-Egyptian arms contract—which has brought bitter comments from Western leaders—has upset the "arms balance" the Western powers have been trying to maintain between Israel and the Arab states since 1950.

★ 2. The violent reaction to the British proposal to Jordan that she should join the Baghdad Pact.

Failure to get Jordan into the pact was seen in the West as a major blow to British policy, which has been working for more than a year on the gradual construction of the organization.

★ 3. The reaction to the proposals put forward last November by the British Prime Minister for an Arab-Israeli settlement. Sir Anthony Eden then called for a compromise between Israel's insistence that her permanent frontiers should be based on the 1949 armistice lines and the Arab countries' argument that the lines should be those proposed by the United Nations in 1947—which would make Israel much smaller than at present.

Israel rejected Sir Anthony Eden's idea, while most of the Arab states were non-committal.

Discounted

Foreign Office officials today discounted suggestions that any major decisions might spring from Mr Lloyd's meetings with the envoys.

A spokesman said it would be a "general discussion" with Mr Lloyd in the chair. — China Mail Special.

Free Smoking For Volunteers

Sheffield, Dec. 29. Medical experts at Sheffield University are looking for strong-willed volunteers to undergo tests to show what effect smoking has on the lungs before and after giving it up.

Professor William Hobson, head of the University's Department of Social and Industrial Medicine, said yesterday that heavy smokers, men and women, were wanted to help check whether the effects of smoking are reversible or not and if there is a point of no return.

The smokers will have to go on puffing for a few days while they are X-rayed and given a breathing test and chest examination. Then they will have to give up smoking altogether. — China Mail Special.

Pennsylvania Backs Ike's Candidacy

Harrisburg, Dec. 29. The Republican Party of Pennsylvania today officially came out in favour of a second term of office for President Eisenhower.

The State party organization decided to back Eisenhower's candidacy for the November, 1956 presidential election by entering his supporters in the State primary elections on April 24.

Delegates selected in the primary elections nominate the party's presidential candidate at the Republican Party National Convention. The State of Pennsylvania forms one of the biggest blocs of voters in the National Convention. — France-Press.

Prince von Starhemberg

Ex-Austrian Vice-Chancellor Returns

Vienna, Dec. 29. THE former Austrian Vice-Chancellor, Prince Ernst Ruediger von Starhemberg arrived in Salzburg this afternoon from Brazil.

He left the West Austrian city almost at once for a family estate at Eisenkappel in the southern province of Carinthia.

The Prince's return to Austria follows the restitution to his son by the Austrian Supreme Court of 38 estates and castles confiscated by the Nazis following the Anschluss.

Contested

Their return has long been contested by the Austrian Socialist Party which accused the Prince of having crushed the Socialist rebellion in Vienna in February, 1934 and thus of having aided Hitler's entry into Austria.

The Prince was Vice-Chancellor in the Dollfus and Schuschnigg governments and head of the Heimwehr patriotic militia.

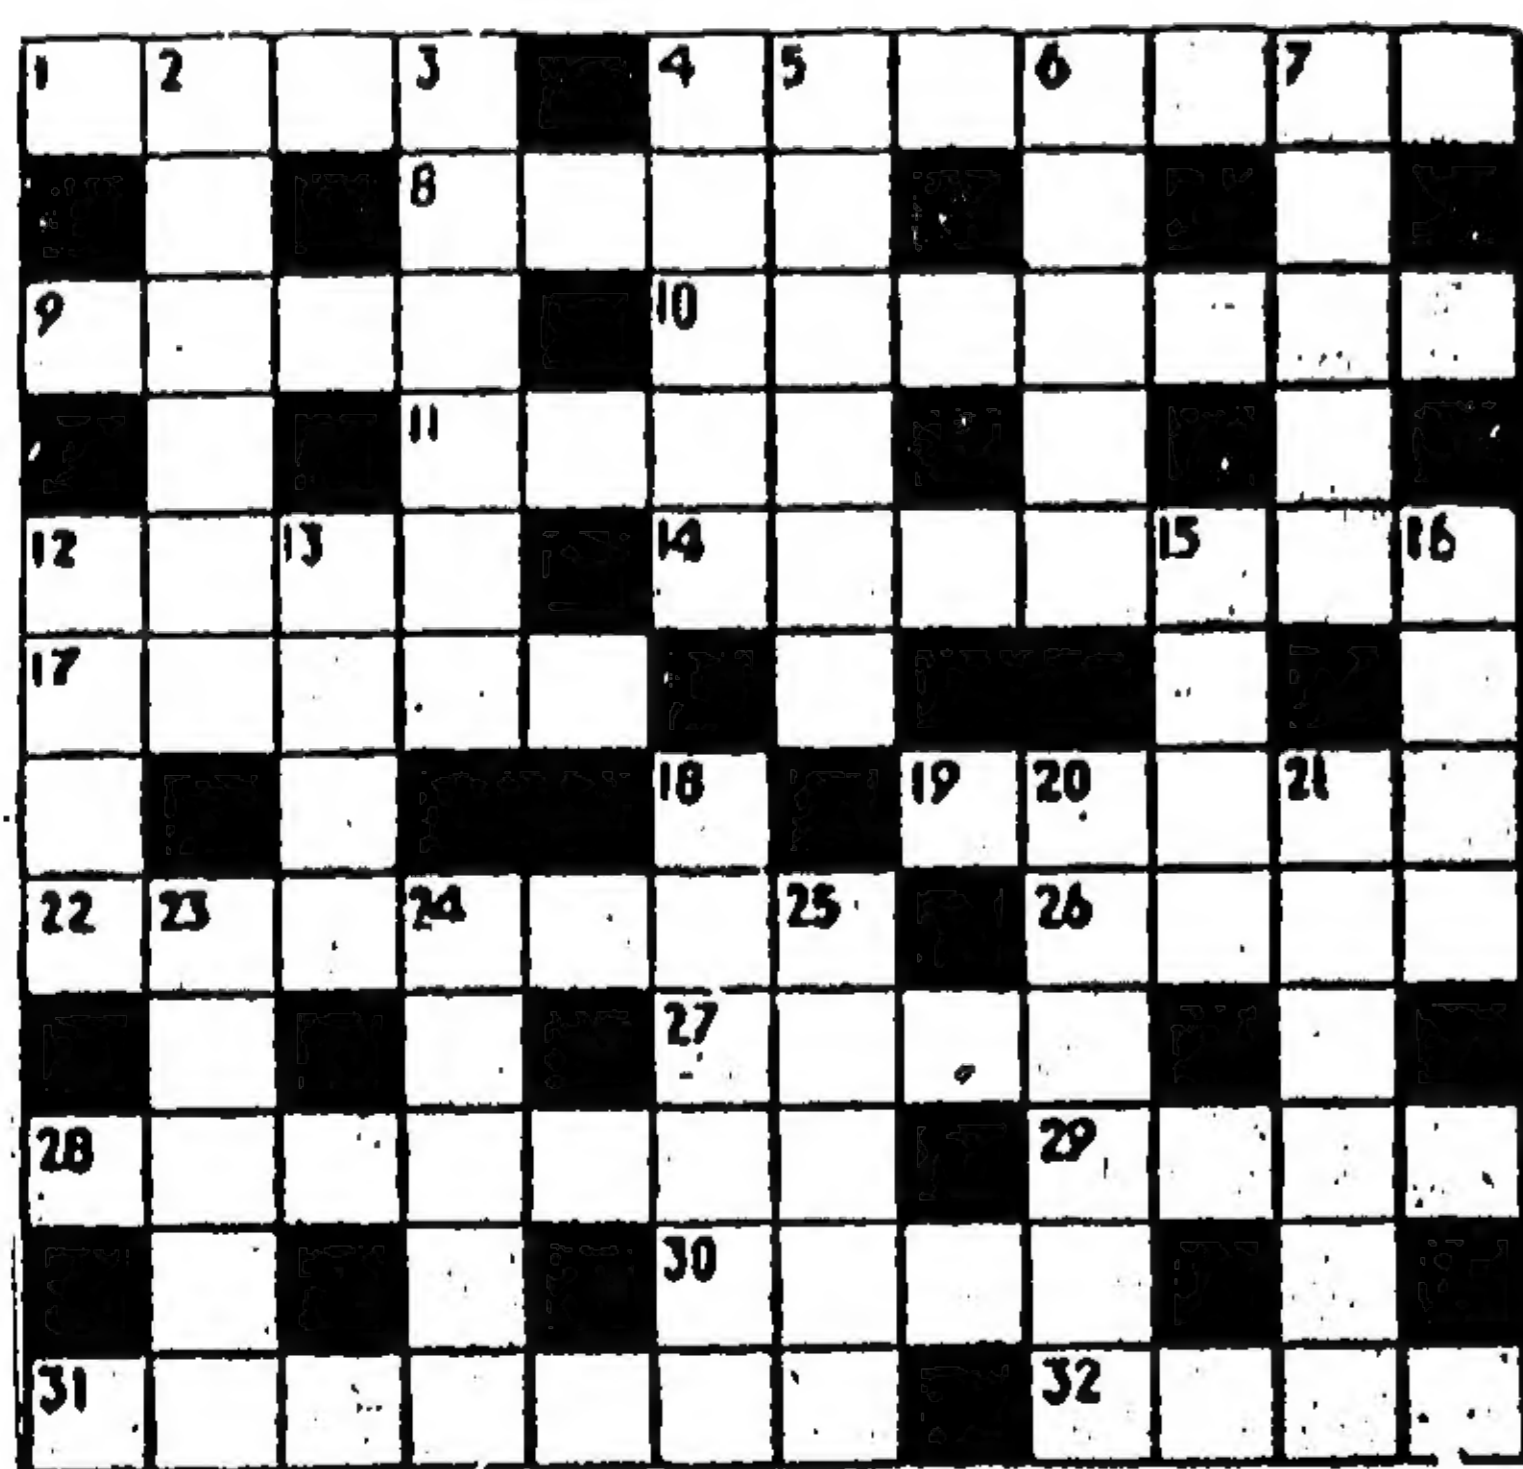

His wife, Viennese actress Nora Gregor, committed suicide after the war in South America, where the Prince has lived until recently. —France-Press.

7,000 RED PLANES IN FAR EAST

Washington, Dec. 29. General Lawrence Kuter, commander of the United States Far East Air Force, said today that the Communists have more than 7,000 aircraft, about half of them jets, in the Far East compared with some 2,000 American planes.

Writing in the unofficial Army, Navy, Air Force Journal General Kuter quoted latest intelligence reports which he said showed the "Communist bloc now had almost one-third of its air power based in North Korea and other Communist-controlled parts of the Far East." —Reuters.

Red Leaders Denounced

INTERNATIONAL MERCHANTS OF HATE

Washington, Dec. 29.

The Secretary of State, Mr. John Foster Dulles, today denounced the Russian leaders as international "hate merchants" and predicted that they would use any means short of war to stir up trouble in the New Year.

Citing Communist intervention in such situations as the tense Arab-Israeli controversy, Mr. Dulles said he expected the men in the Kremlin to try to "exploit situations where free-world countries seem divided by historic disputes."

While warning that Russia is continuing its vast arms build-up, he said: "For the time being, it seems that Soviet leaders will seek to pursue their ambitions by means other than the use of threat of open force." "It is by a merchant of international hatred, perhaps, one degree less than is perhaps a merchant of death."

Forecast

Mr. Dulles joined the other nine members of President Eisenhower's Cabinet in a special "election year report" published in Nation's Business, a publication of the US Chamber of Commerce. Each reported on the "aims and accomplishments" of his Department, with a forecast of things to come.

The Defence Secretary, Mr. Charles Wilson, who plans a $1,000,000,000 increase in military spending next year, promised to "redouble" his efforts to eliminate waste and inefficiency to "get the maximum defence out of every dollar spent."

He said the armed forces would be kept at about their present size and equipped with the most modern weapons. He also said the ability of the United States to launch a "retaliatory" attack against any aggression was "unequalled in the world and we plan to keep it so." —United Press.

HAS RUSSIA GOT INTERCONTINENTAL BALLISTIC MISSILE?

Washington, Dec. 29.

Defence officials expressed doubt today that Russia has developed an intercontinental missile.

At the same time they cautioned against underestimating Russian capabilities in this fateful field.

Defence officials, who have been taken back by Russian technological advances in the past, were not inclined to play down Soviet Premier Nikolai Bulganin's latest hint that Russia has developed rocket weapons of "intercontinental power."

Development of an ocean-spanning missile could tip the balance of world power. There is no known defence against an intercontinental ballistic missile, which often is called the ultimate weapon of the future.

Called For Ban

Bulganin alluded to the intercontinental missile while calling for a ban on rocket and atomic weapons.

Officials were inclined to shrug off Bulganin's call for an arms ban as mere propaganda. Both Russia and the United States are known to be working on development of an ICBM. The United States in recent weeks has put the ballistic missile programme in a top priority category.

US development of an ICBM, however, is believed several years away according to present predictions.

SUES FAROUK

Rome, Dec. 29. An Italian, who said he was the secretary of ex-king Farouk of Egypt for over a year, today brought a 1,600,000 lire suit against the former monarch on the grounds that he did not receive proper notice and indemnity when he was dismissed.

Alberto Osorio claimed he was sacked at eight days' notice last October after having worked for ex-king Farouk 17 months. Farouk, he alleged, offered him 200,000 lire but he wanted 1,600,000 lire.

The case was to be heard by a court on January 3. —China Mail Special.

Shooting Of Alleged Terrorist

French Govt May Take Action

Paris, Dec. 29.

The French Government disclosed tonight that it was investigating with a view to legal action the newsreel pictures reproduced in a French newspaper and purporting to show a French auxiliary gendarme shooting an Algerian terrorist.

Sources close to the Ministry of the Interior said it was alleged a cameraman working for a foreign company bribed the gendarme to kill the terrorist.

The pictures, were published today in the anti-government newspaper Express which has been making Algeria an election issue.

They showed a man walking away from a uniformed man who was aiming a rifle, then the walker falling to his knees and finally full length on the ground.

Express, which represents the views of the Radical ex-Premier M. Pierre Mendès-France, has been campaigning against what it calls the Government's "policy of force" in Algeria.

Faure Indignant

Government spokesmen in the election campaign have accused the Mendès-France of exploiting the grave Algerian situation for electoral ends.

Mr. Faure said in a statement tonight: "I deplore and I am indignant that a French newspaper should without troubling either to seek out the truth of the facts which it relates, or to distinguish the elements of the reports which it publishes, have gone so far, no doubt for electoral ends, as to lose sight of the elementary sense of the national interest which is harmed by such procedures in Metropolitan France in Algeria and abroad." —Reuters.

Chinese PoWs Changing Minds

New Delhi, Dec. 29.

The Brazilian Embassy was making final arrangements today to transport Korean and Chinese prisoners of the Korean war to Brazil from India.

As many as 82 of the 82 prisoners who came here wanted to go to Brazil a month ago. But it appears that some are changing their minds and the latest count indicated only 38 will leave for Brazil in the next week of January.

The prisoners, who came to India two years ago, are being jointly supported by the United Nations command and the Chinese Government.

Mexico and Argentina also have announced that they are willing to take some prisoners. It was indicated about 10 of the POWs they proposed to take are in the new camp. —United Press.

Outstanding Artists Named For 1955

Los Angeles, Dec. 29.

George Braque, a French painter, Ernest Hemingway, American author, Susan Strassberg, young American actress, and Igor Stravinsky, Russian-born composer, today were named the outstanding artists of 1955 by the National Arts Foundation.

The Foundation described M. Braque as "a painter whose nobility arises from the rectitude of his emotion, a gentle master who has added his own enchanting vocabulary to the common language of art by extraordinary concentration, love of order, exactitude, objectivity and the inventive play with forms."

Own Visions

"M. Braque has set forth his own visions. In light shadow form and colour he has created many contemplative and original twentieth century paintings."

The Foundation said of Mr. Hemingway "he has had more influence on world literature than any living American. He picks a big wallop in a small sentence, tells his story the way people think and talk. Hemingway lives fully and writes the way he lives. He has as he says faced eternity each day."

Miss Strassberg, 17 years old, was the first artist under 30 years old ever to be honoured by the Foundation.

Most Gifted

She made her debut recently in the Broadway play, "The Diary of Anne Frank."

The Foundation said "she is the most gifted actress to appear in many decades."

The Foundation said of Mr. Stravinsky "you are a master craftsman, the dynamic innovator in modern music. Your strivings after an austere ideal to pure music spearheaded one creative evolution after another... you have produced your own individual and distinctive masterpieces." —Reuters.

20 Missing In US Floods

San Francisco, Dec. 29. Relief and reconstruction workers toiled hard today to salvage homes and businesses ravaged by California's most destructive floods.

The toll of known dead reached 40 in California and 12 in Oregon.

Between ten and 20 persons were still reported missing and presumed dead in California and three in Oregon.

In Bogota, Colombia, floods have swept away about 70 houses in town of Algeciras in the Magdalena River area of Colombia and the number of dead is between ten and 50. —Reuters.

Khrushchev's Attack On Ike Shocks Washington

Washington, Dec. 29.

OFFICIALS here were shocked by the unprecedented personal attack on President Eisenhower today by the Soviet Party Communist Secretary, Mr. Nikita Khrushchev.

But they declined any immediate official comment on the speech before the Supreme Soviet and said that it was unlikely that any point-by-point rebuttal would be made "on that sort of speech." They described Mr. Khrushchev as being "just nasty."

It was noted that neither the speech of Mr. Khrushchev nor that of the Soviet Premier, Marshal Nikolai Bulganin, contained any new policy statements or any propaganda points which had not already been made by the Soviet leaders during what is frequently referred to here as their recent "bad will" tour of Asia.

But it was the violent tone and language of today's speech by Mr. Khrushchev which shocked official Washington as showing just how far the Soviet leaders were now willing to go in their departure from the spirit of Geneva. —China Mail Special.

TREE THIEVES FOILED

Berlin, Dec. 29.

A gardener, who cooked up a smelly sticky brew with which he coated fir trees, foiled the usual Christmas tree thieves in the West Berlin borough of Reinickendorf.

The public was well advised that if the coated trees were taken into a warm room the stench would soon drive out human inhabitants and for the first time since the war Reinickendorf's gardens and parks were not despoiled of fir trees. —China Mail Special.

To Heal Breach?

Montreal, Dec. 29.

Three of the Dionne quintuplets will visit their parents over the New Year holiday to try to heal the family rift, they announced today.

In a statement the girls said that all but Marie would make the trip to Callander, Ontario, where the Dionnes have an 18-room house. —China Mail Special.

What makes Sammy run...

'SAM' BEING the family pet name for Hugh Gaitskell, Attlee's successor as leader of the Socialist Party.

Gaitskell's rivals—Morrison and Bevan—are already widely known, widely written about. But Gaitskell's swift strides to success are inadequately chronicled.

Not until 10 years ago was he even an M.P.
And yet in that brief time he finds himself
the likely tenant of No. 10—if the Socialists ever get back to power.

We should all know more about this man
and what makes him run.

by GEORGE GALE

A LONG the back row of the stilted, posed family portrait stand a dozen turbaned domestics, a pony, and a donkey. The cook holds a saucepan in his hand. Three people are sitting in the front row.

On the right is a slender man, getting on for 40, with a face in which lie sternness and duty. He leans forward, fingering a dog's ear.
In the centre is a woman with a softer face, a dog on her lap, another at her feet. And on the left, in the arms of a primly pursing nanny, is a child.

The portrait was taken in 1906. It is a portrait of the British raj, and of the family of a civil servant who administered part of Burma.

The infant's name is Hugh Todd Naylor Gaitskell, known to his family as Sam. He was a pretty baby.

"I never really had a home life." His father died in Burma when Hugh was 12. His mother eventually remarried.

He remembers his father as a stern man whose legacy to his children was a sense of duty.
He remembers his mother with love. "Yes, she is still alive. She is 78," he says with normal pride.

A BOWLER

HE grew up in England, a boarder at the Dragon
prep school in Oxford at six.
Holidays in Norfolk, in flats in London, in Oxford.

At school J. P. W. Mallalieu
(now a Socialist M.P.), beat him in a speech competition.
John Bejerman, the poet, says he saw Gaitskell, aged 12, wearing a bowler in South Kensington.

Gaitskell once bumped into the father of one of the boys at school. "He was a strange old man. I don't suppose he was really old. He asked me what I was going to do. I said I was going on to Winchester.

"He said to me: 'I hope you realize how lucky you are. Not one boy in 10,000 has the chance of an education like that.'

"I remember the incident still in every detail. It happened on the Banbury road."
His loving mother and stern father did not influence the boy.
"At that time I loved most my brother. I wanted to do everything he did. He was six years older than me. I followed him step by step up the school.
When he was around 1 was happy. When he was not I was miserable."

A PREFECT

HE did not get a scholarship to Winchester, though he had hoped to. For a year he sat beside Richard Crossman, (the ex-Bevanite, apologist, now Gaitskell's welcomed ally). "He was much cleverer than I was."
He was always trotting out Latin verses.

Douglas Jay (who has been a Socialist Minister, and is now the principal altar-boy to Gaitskell) says: "Gaitskell at school was always pointed out as a don's life attracted him.

He worked hard too, and got his first in the new and slightly spivvish hybrid Philosophy, Politics, and Economics. But it was only an average first.

He now had to make his first important decision unaided by his brother's example. He did not want to join the Civil Service. The indiscipline of a don's life attracted him.

Each top name in fashion dis-
claimed the coat. "Not guilty,"
said Victor Stiebel.
"I didn't make it," said Norman Hartnell. "It isn't mine."

- The key was
- a slightly
- spivvish degree at Oxford

But Gaitskell knew clearly now his second ambition: to succeed. This was to remain constant and demanding.

In 1937, too, he married a woman who has shared his ambitions and, say those who know her well, reinforced them.
Yet his curly hair, boy's mouth, weak chin did not suggest success any more than his regret. He remained one of several clever young economists on the fringe of influence, far from the shore of power.

The war brought him near the shore of power. The war gave him authority. The war gave him responsibility. The war disciplined his ambition, taught him to administer, taught him, too, the restraints placed upon power by the practicable, the discreet, the polite.
The academician became civil servant; the civil servant stirred restlessly into the politician.

A FLAT

HE was a good teacher. He taught economics to Nottingham miners. He got on well with the girls at the local palace. He took a flat, and emancipated himself from landladies.

He came to London as a lecturer in economics at University College. His friendship with Evan Durbin, the most powerful of his life, now completed itself.

Durbin was another young Socialist economist. Gaitskell took to the political platform on Durbin's behalf in 1929.
Until Durbin was drowned in 1947 (when he was a junior Minister), the two were to be bracketed together, and usually Durbin came first. "Evan," says Gaitskell, "was better organised than I. I had more 'touch'."

In 1931 Gaitskell was nominated for Chatham. "This was the only time I have ever questioned the practicability of democratic 'Socialism'." He spoke on the same platform as Communists, but his local party decided against such activities,
and he accepted the decision painlessly.

He went to Vienna for a year,
helped shuttle refugees out,
then returned to fight and lose
Chatham in the 1935 election.

"I was bitterly disappointed."
In that unhappy year politics did not seem to lead to success for Gaitskell. Nor did his academic life. "I am not a scholar. I am too impatient. I think I was a good teacher.
But I did no research."

He went down to his mother's cottage to write his resignation, but then returned to fight and lose
Chatham in the 1935 election.

"The telephone rang. Dalton wished to see me urgently. I saw him in London. He told me he was going to the Board of Trade, and wanted me to go with him. I told him I was about to resign."

"It was a Sunday. We talked very late and drank a lot of

MAN

MOMENT

whisky. Dalton said I could go as his 'personal assistant.'

"Early in the morning I got up and went from the basement in the Ministry and wrote a note to Dalton, setting out my conditions: 1. The UNRRA job remained open for three months. 2. I was to go as personal assistant. 3. No more late nights with Dalton. He accepted my conditions."

Gaitskell smiles faintly now, remembering this.

So came the end of the war,
the General Election of 1945, and another choice. Remain a senior civil servant; return to academic life—or fight Leeds South for the Socialists. He had a slight attack of tremor. "I think it was with the pressure of fear," he says. "Of what? 'Oh, bombs and things.'"

Dalton called in Horder, who said he could stand.

A SEAT

GAITSKELL stood and won the seat with a majority of 10,000. He could have become at once Secretary for Overseas Trade, under Cripps. The doctors said "No."

"But I wouldn't have gone into the Commons to remain a back-bencher. I wanted a job.
I wanted to do things."

Within six months he became Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Fuel and Power.
The road was opening up. It is familiar. It looked broad and straight. It led to power and authority, to limelight, to success.

The man who, as boy and young man, had never done as much as he was expected to do, now began doing more than he was expected to do.

Vancouver, where
BANKS GET HELD UP REGULARLY
By Jack Brooks

Vancouver.
WHEN bank teller Mrs.
Barbara Wood caught her usual bus to work at the Dunsmuir and Granville branch of the Imperial Bank of Canada in Vancouver BC, it looked like being just another working day. Two hours later, however, she was calling a risky bluff — on a bank robber who had tried to hold up her bank.

Don't think from this that Mrs.
Wood was unlucky, for the odds are only 10 to one against any particular one of Vancouver's 125 banks being held up during the 230-odd working days of the year. For Mrs Wood the odds had merely run out.

Vancouver today is as important to bank hold-ups as the Middle West of America was in the heyday of the late and unlabeled Dillinger, Baby-Face
Nelson and Co.

SAME METHOD

Thirteen times so far this year thugs have walked into bank buildings threatening
"Pay up or else..." and 13 times walked out again the richer for the threat.

The robbery method is usually the same. They walked to a teller's cage, show the teller a note reading: "Give me the money or I'll shoot to kill," grab every dollar in sight and walk out—fast.

Within seconds the alarm bells are ringing in every police car, newspaper office and radio station. Minutes later police and reporters are at the now-closed doors of the bank and the hunt is on.

This has become so regular that it is almost monotonous.
So much so that bank staffs can answer the usual questions from police and press without the questions being asked.
Everybody just takes it in their stride.

The police reaction, meanwhile, is to appoint special cars and crews armed with submachine guns to go on touring duty.

DANGEROUS MEN

Finally, the reaction of the underworld is to use masks, work faster, steal faster getaway cars and keep your mouth shut. And so the hold-ups continue.

So far this year 23 men have taken part in the 13 hold-ups.
Ten of them are still free with an estimated $10,000 in loot.
The rest are doing an average of 14 years behind bars in terms ranging from four years to life—and an occasional lash or two.

In all, $30,000 was stolen from banks in armed hold-ups this year. Most of the hold-up men are armed—and dangerous.

There was the one who grabbed a young girl bystander outside the bank and held her as hostage while he ran to his car. A steel-nerved policeman shot him in the head, the bullet whistling an inch past the left ear of the hostage.

Some, like the one who met up with Mrs Wood, try to bluff. In her case, she sensed he had no gun and demanded to see one before handing over cash. The bandit fled without a dollar.

Who Dropped The Bricks Of 1955?

By ANNE EDWARDS

PRINCESS MARGARET dropped a fashion brick the other day which is echoing still.

She turned up at Hurst Park races in an extraordinary coat (a knee-length camel hair trench coat with a fur collar) suitable for bengling, which she wore with black suede accessories suitable for a cocktail party in town.

Each top name in fashion dis-
claimed the coat. "Not guilty,"
said Victor Stiebel.
"I didn't make it," said Norman Hartnell. "It isn't mine."

said Cavanagh. "Definitely not me," said Paterson.

But the Princess is not the only one to drop a brick: this year.

Crawley, the former royal governess, described in a magazine a "drooping" the Coler ceremony which didn't take place with the words: "The bearing, and dignity of the Queen, at the 'drooping' of the Colours, ceremony at the Horse Guards Parade last week caused admiration among the spectators."

High on the list of resounding dropped bricks is the rich man's boob made by Mr. R. A. Butler, when he told the nation whose average weekly earnings in the main industries is £18 not to drop back into easy evenings with port wine and over-ripe peasants.

Hard to pick one brick bigger than the rest from the "line series" dropped by the Doctors, but the one she admits herself that she "will never live down" is the phrase she used to explain why her car was upholstered in straw-stuff. "Black is too bad to sit on."

Biggest boob by a visiting American star is the one made by Ava Gardner, who was in London for the kids of free publicity that American stars get from being presented to the Queen, and wore a dress so tight that she could not curtsy.

And for my sixth I choose a girl who made her name as the silent star—Sabrina.

A girl who looked promising while she remained dumb, but when she opened her mouth to a TV programme—what a brick that was.

"Flat, endless, dull—it was the reverses of everything that Sabrina looks like."

CONCLUDING THE JIMMY DIMMOCK STORY

Curt Words—And I Leave Spurs

As told by JIMMY DIMMOCK to JACK WOOD

The magic that found expression through the feet of Jimmy Dimmock was still there in 1926 when Dimmock's father died and his other "father," Peter McWilliam, left Tottenham Hotspur to manage Middlesbrough. Jimmy never recovered from the double blow.

"Dad had given me my start. He was a kind man, and, although I got into a number of scrapes, he was always there to help. The same went for Peter McWilliam," says Dimmock.

"There were great managers before him, and great ones since. But never a greater. He made it his job to study each player and he knew what was best for him.

"He knew that I liked spending, and as I've told, held back part of my money each week for the bank. There were times when he tried to get me to live away from Tottenham to keep me away from my pals.

"Once he fixed up for me to go into digs near Arthur Grimstead in Watford. I took a bag down there and spent one night. The next night I was back home."

When Peter McWilliam left, he took with him a parting gift from Dimmock—a £25 tie-pin with the famous Spurs cockerel on a diamond.

CALL TO NORTH

The sunny days of his time with Spurs were now over. His great pal, Jack Elkes, had gone to Middlesbrough and Peter McWilliam made a bid to persuade Dimmock to go there too. "I almost agreed. The Spurs let me talk to my old boss and he almost sold me the idea of going North. But the clubs could not settle on a fee and the deal fell through."

Jimmy Dimmock. He told his story in a North London hospital.

"I was not sorry at the time. But looking back, boy, I often wonder what would have happened had I made the move."

Perhaps he would have stayed there and become a leading Northern light. Certainly his star was dipping down now from dizzy heights to depths that tested his resilience and cocky spirit to the full.

Spurs were relegated to the Second Division in 1928. The boy wonder, the hero of the early twenties, shared in the decline that made White Hart-line a gloomy place.

Dimmock tried to forget that times were bad. He became more and more friendly with the bottle, though he still stuck to a lifelong rule that there should be no drinking in the 24 hours before a game.

UNHAPPY TWIST

Then, in the summer of 1930, came the final unhappy twist to the story of Dimmock and Spurs. He received a note from Percy Smith, who had succeeded McWilliam as manager.

Here are the words that stick in the Dimmock throat to this day. Words that made him for a time a bitter, unhappy young man. For remember, he was still only a few months over 30:

"The directors have not yet made up their mind whether to re-engage you for next season."

That, and nothing else, the marriage between the mighty club and the ldd next door was over. Dimmock was on his way out.

Several clubs tried to sign him. Mr. Prince Cox, manager of Bristol Rovers, stayed in London for three days in a bid to get him. "He told me I could be sure of a first-team place. But I didn't fancy the idea of getting stranded down there. So I joined the newly formed Thames club. They folded up after only two seasons."

NOW TO BUSINESS

There followed a season with Leyton Orient and then one with Ashford in the Kent League.

"I was never happy with any of these clubs. It just wasn't the same. So at the end of the 1933 season Jimmy boy said goodbye to football."

"I had nearly £3,500 in the bank, thanks to a couple of £650 bonuses with Spurs and the foresight of Peter McWilliam. I was ready for business."

For the first time in our bedside talks, the mood changed. It was obvious that business and Dimmock were uneasy partners. He began in the haulage business, buying a couple of lorries and carting furniture north with his two younger brothers.

"But it was no good. I'd get up north, meet a few of my footballing pals up there and forget to come back for a few days. I was never cut out for this business lark—not on my own account anyway."

Then he opened a jellied ool and shellfish stall outside an hotel close to White Hart-line. For a while business was good. Spurs fans remembered the great days and found it an excuse to talk to the great man of yesterday.

Often old playing pals would visit the stall. "I never had the heart to charge them for their ool," he says in a way that tells you he would do the same thing again.

"Then we'd adjourn to the pub and talk over old times. What with that and me liding cels so much myself there wasn't any profit."

HINT TO YOUTH

"The modern footballer is luckier. He has classes he can go to and get himself trained for business."

I asked Jimmy what he would do if it could happen all over again. Came a reply as sincere as it was spontaneous.

"You know, boy, I think I would do it all over again. But perhaps I wouldn't be quite such a fool with money. In the good days I several times sent fellers along to my tailor to get measured for a suit. I paid the bill."

"To the youngsters of today, I would say this: Plan in your minds what you are going to do when the glamour and fun of playing have gone. "Get yourself a good wife. My Alice was always that to me. If it hadn't been for sticking to me through all those times when her Jim was being a bit of a fool... well, I guess I would only have been worse."

AAU Officials Are Quadrennial Hitchhikers

Kansas City, Missouri, Dec. 29

Dr. Forrest Allen, veteran basketball coach at the University of Kansas and outspoken critic of athletic practices in general, today described Amateur Athletic Union officials as "quadrennial oceanic hitchhikers."

Dr. Allen's criticism came during a speech before the Breakfast Club of Optimist International. He referred specifically to the AAU handling of the West Santee case.

Santee, America's fastest mile runner, was suspended by the AAU last October. It was alleged that he had accepted excessive expense money for three spring track meets in California. A reversal of the AAU action made on November 20 lifted Santee's suspension.

The vociferous Allen said a committee of seven officials was responsible for the AAU ruling. He termed the group "an anonymous bunch that seems like the Ku Klux Klan."

Santee, Dr. Allen said, is a "fine boy, a good student, who just likes to run and because he can run well he was invited to various track meets sponsored by the AAU throughout the country."

"We went out to California when he was invited and got travel expenses. And that supposedly makes him a professional. Nuts. I know half-dozen or almost a dozen young men who have become wealthy in AAU meets in the past through expense money."

Every athlete who gets a college scholarship, Dr. Allen said, is a "professional, one who receives compensation for athletic skill or knowledge. Let's not fool ourselves about this amateur business."

The only excuse for having the AAU, he said, was that it was a part of the American Olympic Committee. He added: "As far as its work in the Olympics is concerned, the AAU officials are quadrennial hitchhikers. Every four years they hitchhike overseas on your money."—United Press.

JOHN LANDY TO RUN AGAIN

Melbourne, Dec. 30. John Landy, Australian World Mile record holder, who has been out of competition since last December, said today he would return to the track at the Olympic Park here next Wednesday.

Landy will run in the half-mile and his opponents will include Lon Spurrier, United States, who set new World figures for the distance last March.

Landy said he was not expecting to win, but would use the race as "a tryout."—China Mail Special.

SUGAR RAY ROBINSON TELLS

How I Got Rid Of My Ghost

On December 9 Sugar Ray Robinson emerged from a sudden obscurity to a sudden new fame by becoming the only boxer in the world to "come back" and win a World Championship for the third time. RICHARD KILLAN sought the How and the Why.

The answers:—

NEW YORK.

Sugar Ray Robinson, wearing the constant smile of a man who has played a trick on the whole world, is back in business.

His Harlem bar is packing customers four deep since his against-the-odds return to the Middleweight Championship. "I just got rid of my ghost," Sugar told me today over the din of clinking glasses.

He meant that he had conquered the haunting fear that he would fail to recapture the glory—and the big money—of a World Champion.

And Sugar, 35 years old, did it with a flurry of spectacular punches "like old times" to knock out 28-year-old Bobo Olson.

THE NEED

But what goaded Sugar Ray into going through the drudgery of training for the chance to win the Middleweight title for the third time?

Money—the lack of it. Most of Sugar's troubles he brought on himself. It was not a twist of fate that made him start downhill after riding one of boxing's greatest careers to its highest peak.

In Harlem, where hero-worship approaches the religious fervor of evangelism, Ray was thoroughly disliked.

And his money-making business—he had his finger in all kinds of pies—was boycotted for a long time by Harlem's hundreds of thousands.

THE CONTRAST

For years the coloured people had objected to Ray and his flamingo-coloured Cadillac, his jewels, his garish clothes, valets, and his servants.

He kept a dwarf in his entourage. The contrast with the poverty of Harlem was too much. And Sugar's businesses began to fail.

Last year Sugar sent for his personal physician, Dr. Vincent Nardello, and said: "Doc, I've got to get some money."

Said Nardello, official doctor for the New York State Athletic Commission: "All he needed to polish his timing, blocking, feinting and weaving was a few weeks of practice."

THE GAMBOLS

WEALTHY CALIFORNIAN TO INVAD INTERNATIONAL MOTOR RACING

By DAVID SELLS

Modena, Italy.

A wealthy, Californian building contractor, Mr. Tony Parravano, is planning a full-scale invasion of international motor-racing next season in a bid to scoop the top places in Grand Prix and Sports car competitions.

A fleet of 22 Ferrari and Maserati racing machines is to be his striking force. He hopes it will win him the number one racing position vacated by the all-conquering Mercedes-Benz stable, which retired temporarily from the Championship battle this autumn.

Drivers will be chosen from a team of six or eight men, two "aces" supported by brilliant young men with growing reputations.

Skilled German mechanics from Stuttgart, leading the Parravano technical squad, will nurse the cars at his Modena base.

The architect of this ambitious campaign, which may well mould the pattern of 1956 racing, is a tubby Italian-American who emigrated from Arping, a mountain village in the Abruzzi province, at the age of 16. He is now 37, married, and has two sons.

STILL UNKNOWN

The fortune he has amassed in his Los Angeles building business is equalled only by his passion for motor-racing.

Since he began racing cars four years ago, Mr. Parravano has become known as a leading American enthusiast, although his cars have only occasionally competed. He is still an "unknown." If his plans mature successfully, however, racing fans will not long remain in ignorance of his name.

Mr. Parravano remains genuinely modest about his chances next season, honest about his hopes, and impressively cool in his planning. "I am not worried about getting drivers," he told me. "The vital thing is to have good cars, running smoothly."

Already, he owns 14 machines (four Maseratis and 10 Ferraris), mostly stabled in Los Angeles. On order, are three Maserati Grand Prix models, three Maserati sports, and two 3,500 c.c. Ferraris.

"I intend to modify some of them, fitting fuel-injection and possibly new gear-changes," he said. "I think my cars will be able to beat the Ferrari and Maserati works teams, but we must wait and see."

"You must prepare cars for races well ahead of time and plan like Mercedes and Jaguar do—that is my rule. I think the Italians fall here."

"Their cars are unreliable in this respect. Even a couple of days before a race, sometimes, their cars have not been finally chosen. They break down."

Asked if he intended to run any Mercedes cars, Mr. Parravano replied: "They will not sell."

He has great faith in the potential abilities of young drivers and decided views on racing discipline.

ALL YOUNG DRIVERS

"With proper cars, lots of drivers have a good chance to get close to Moss and Fangio," he declares. "Moss was never up to much before he drove Mercedes, but look at him now."

"I would rather have all young drivers so that they can be trained. A lot of drivers get spoiled, especially Italians, who get so they don't give a damn what you tell them."

"Drivers should lead regular lives when racing. No 2 a.m. drinking, heavy smoking and having a general good time on the day of a race. I have seen a lot of drivers like that. You could never change them now."

Among the "youngsters" with whom Mr. Parravano is negotiating are Cesare Perdisi, Fernando Minnelli, and Giorgio Scarlati, of Italy, and Tony Brooks of Britain.

No one outside Britain had ever heard of Brooks before he won The Syracuse Grand Prix (Sicily) this October, but he drove like a master. I have talked with him briefly, without making any offer, but he is a student dentist, and I do not think he wants to drive full-time.

Mr. Parravano agreed that he had made offers to the British Champion, Stirling Moss, runner-up to Argentinean Manuel Fangio in the 1955 World Championship, Peter Collins, of Britain, who also drove Mercedes cars, and Italy's Eugenio Castellotti, who came third in the Championships.

Of his reported offers to Moss and Castellotti of 50,000,000 lire (£2,750 sterling; 80,000 dollars) each as an engagement fee, he said: "Reports are usually wild, but it would be bad business at this stage to reveal details of my offers."

"No contracts have been signed and no offers accepted yet," he emphasised. "Racing is a business to these boys and they are out shopping for the best deal at present. They naturally want the best money and conditions, with the best cars, so they take a good look round."

He said that the engagement of Carol Shelby, of Dallas, Texas, and Marston Gregory, of Kansas City, both internationally experienced drivers, and of Ken Miles, a young Briton who has

SPORTS ROUNDABOUT

By CORNERING PROFESSIONAL PLAYERS...

OVER ZEALOUS SERVICES' SPORTS OFFICERS ARE MAKING THEMSELVES UNPOPULAR

Says W. CAPEL KIRBY

Over-zealous Services' sports officers are making themselves unpopular by cornering professional footballers on National Service and turning them out in large numbers against clubby clubs in County Cup and League competitions.

This is particularly prevalent in Hampshire where, following protests, the authorities seriously contemplate restricting Services' teams to two or three professionals. And rightly so, in my opinion.

"We'll be clear of the bottom before the end of the season," declares Barrow boss Joe Harvey, who is seeking an outside-right and centre-forward.

An still receiving "Footballer of the Year" suggestions. "For consistency, loyalty and gentlemanly conduct, I recommend Jackie Milburn," writes Tyneside reader Ron Porter.

How many fans of the Border know that Hills have reached the semi-final of the European Club Championship, the lucrative competition Chelsea were talked out of by the Football League?

Advice to Alick Jeffrey—be blind to that Melbourne Olympic miracle and sign professional for Doncaster on January 29, your 17th birthday. Other honours will come your way.

Home sickness was the reason Peter Jackson allowed Grahame Williams, Welsh youth and schoolboy international, to leave Bradford City. That Williams has gone back to his old job at Greenford should interest once keen Liverpool or Everton.

"Functured myself as a footballer, but did stop me," said Brian London after taking another quick start towards the British Heavyweight title at Harringay. This former Blackpool amateur inside-forward now confines his Soccer activities to watching Stanley Matthews and Co.

Raymond Degruy was on offer at £250 in the close season. Today bidders could add another nought and Grimsby wouldn't be the least interested. Now a fixture at left back, this Channel Islander was signed from Nottingham Forest as a left-winger and has played at centre-forward.

FANTASY?
My contention that Jackie Henderson (Portsmouth) is Britain's fastest footballer is contested by several Birmingham fans, who reckon Eddie Brown to be quicker.

Tommy Cahill, former Newcastle full-back, and Les Wood, 21-year-old goalkeeper from Huddersfield, are interesting First Division club scouts.

Well done AAAA! Prearranged pace-making was killing the art of tactics, running, enthusiasm of rank and file and the true amateur spirit. Much more of the Bankster, Chatterbox, Pirie business would have killed athletics.

When Peterborough's players go on golf outings they take their own pro. Their groundsman, Ben Poole, former Preston full-back, is also golf professional at Burghley Park, Stamford.

News that Harold Hasnall will never play again was occupying Bobby Cowell's thoughts as we chatted in London last week.

Newcastle's full-back, who had his leg badly smashed up at Nuremberg last close season, said: "I'm fighting to get back into the game, but deep down I fear the worst."

Bobby finds little consolation in knowing that the German side "killed him" received four months' suspension.

FULL MARKS

Newcastle have been criticised for lack of sentiment, especially since launching the economy lifboat. Give 'em full marks for their generous treatment of the Cowell case. Good deeds for a good fellow.

Still they come. Miss Pat Stanford, of Walsall-on-Tyne supports Jackie Milburn's "Footballer of the Year" candidature. She concluded with "Howway the lads and vor Jackie!"

Not so Mr F. Williams, of Chorltonville, who thinks Stanley Mortensen worthy of the "Footballer of the Year" title as a "supreme example of clean, vigorous and never-give-up play." Any complaints?

Liverpool would like inside-forward Wally Fielding to join them from across the Park, but Everton are not keen, although not unwilling to part with the Londoner.

Peterborough's tall young goalkeeper complained of insufficient action with the reserves. "Right, now, we'll soon remedy that," said manager George Swindin.

Twenty-four hours later Donaldson, Gibson, Emery and Co. put 13 shots past him in a First Team v. Reserves pre-Cup practice match.

"Son" was the correct mode of address, since the complainant was young Les Swindin, a fugger convert.

Barnsley keep getting inquiries for sprightly outside-right Arthur Kaye, candidate for Young England against Scotland's Under 23's at Hillsboro on February 8. "Nothing doing," says manager Tim Ward.

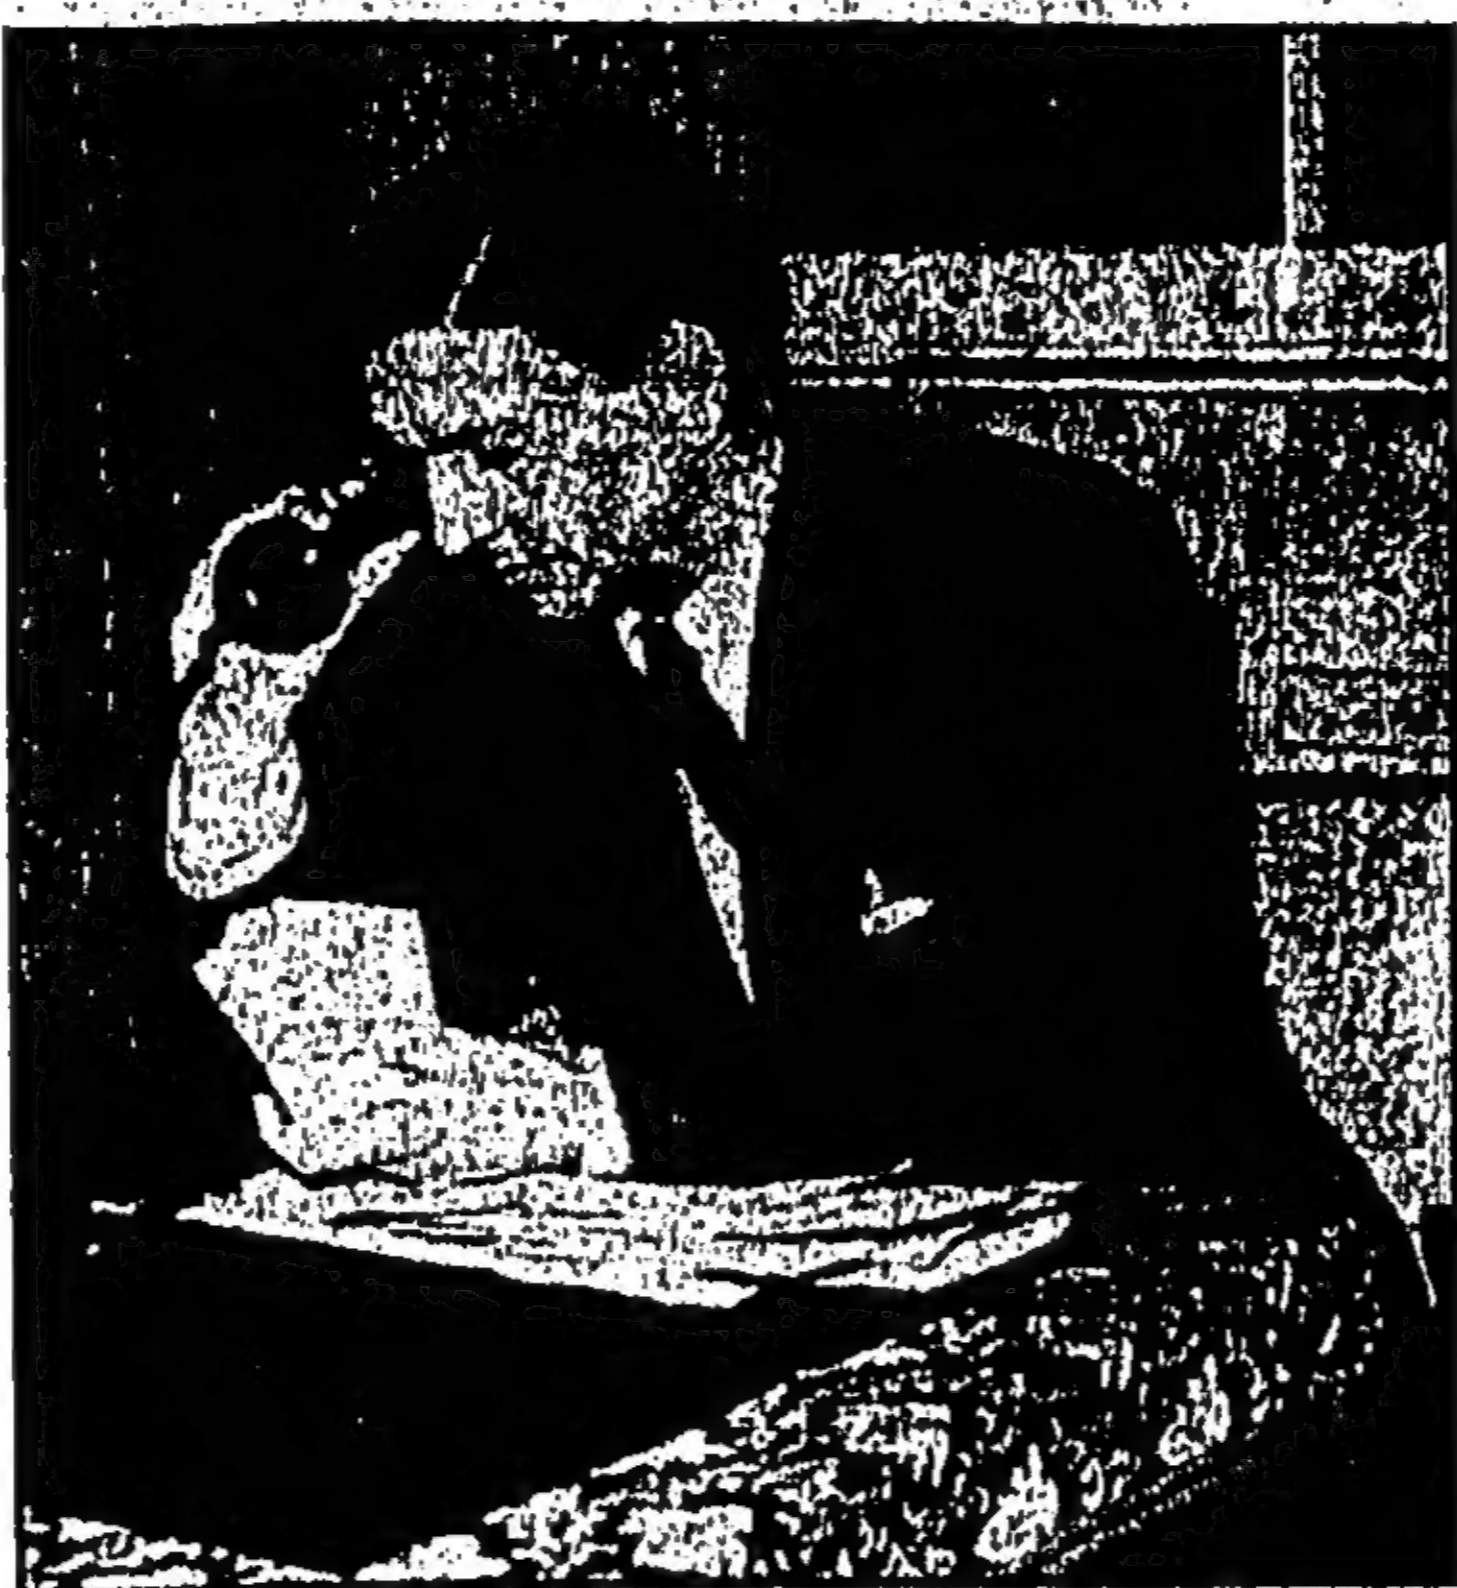

English clubs have quickly sized up the situation of Maxwell Murray being a Rangers reserve yet considered good enough to lead Young Scotland's attack.

Brian Redfern, local boy making good at Bradford, is being watched by First Division clubs looking for goal-conscious left-wingers.

Scottish interest in Bedford Cup triumphs is that skipper Johnny Crichton was formerly with Aldridge and Morton. He set up business as a master builder in Oxford while "giant-killing" with Houdington.

"One advantage of flood-lighting will be a uniform hour of kick-off" is an extract from my book The Mighty Kick, published in 1935. Here's another prediction for 1975—synthetic pitches will be under consideration to beat the weather.

TEAM MANAGER OF ARSENAL

The 38-year-old manager of the London Suburban Club, Leyton Orient, has been asked to take over as team manager of Arsenal — one of the plum jobs in British football. Tom Whittaker, Arsenal's 57-year-old manager-secretary, would continue, with Stock concentrating on running the first team.

The offer — one of the best-kept secrets in football, is being considered by Stock. In addition to a salary in the £2,000 a year class, Stock would have prospects of taking over full control when Mr Whittaker eventually retires.

It is understood that Stock is reluctant to leave Leyton, now London's most successful Club, which under his management is at present heading the Third Division of the British Football League.

In March last year Stock refused an offer to take over the management of the Second Division team, Middlesbrough.

Leyton Orient, in the middle of a promotion drive, will fight to keep their "wonder-manager" who they feel is worthy of full control of a First Division Club — and nothing else.—Express Photo.

Perez Can Become A Millionaire If He Meets Britain's Dai Dower

Says SYDNEY HULLS

Pascual Perez, Argentine's black-haired assassin of the ring, could become a million-peso kind in one hour — if only he would agree to defend his World Flyweight Championship against Dai Dower in Great Britain.

Perez has been guaranteed a million-peso purse ($9,000) for the fight, but he and his manager, Ismael Pace, still have not agreed to the match.

Yet in the Argentine Perez receives only around one-sixth of that sum for his fights.

What is the trouble? Only that Perez is still very much amateur-minded, although it is seven long fighting years since he suffered friends and officials to cut off chunks of his hair and buffet him about with towels to make the Flyweight limit and go on to win an Olympic title at Wembley.

This true-blue amateur spirit is the bane of the professional promoter. If a fighter puts first the roar of the crowd and the glory of winning for his country, what is there left to lure him thousands of miles from his home fans.

£9,000 BAIT

Certainly Perez raised all hopes after winning the World title from Japan's Yoshio Shirai by stunning boldy: "I intend to be a fighting Champion and I'll give everyone a chance at the title."

But after thinking that over for a week he gave us a punch on the nose by qualifying his fight with "If Dai Dower wants a title fight he will have to come to the Argentine."

And despite promoter Solomon's £9,000 bait Perez, to date, has refused to be hooked. But all is not yet lost. A campaign has been launched in the Argentine Press to make Perez peso-conscious.

No need to probe far to find who is behind this.

Back in Britain promoter Solomon, puzzled for a while by how to overcome Perez's resistance to money, is sitting back with a smile that says: "There are more ways than one of skinning a ring tiger."

Already there are signs of a breakdown in the Perez-Pace front.

Pace now admits that if Perez holds his title against Filipino Leo Ephraim at the turn of the year, he must seriously consider staking the Championship against Dower in Britain.—(London Express Service).

Spen Valley Can Prove

A Great Stayer

Says JAMES PARK

After the Middle Park Stakes I was discussing the race with one of our leading trainers. We talked about the great tussle between the three leaders, and then my trainer-friend remarked: "If I had my choice of that lot I should pick Spen Valley."

The colt had finished fifth of six, so naturally I wanted to know why. I had a shrewd suspicion what the answer would be and it was forthcoming.

The reason was that Spen Valley appeared to have more scope for improvement than any of those who finished in front of him. For myself, I might have made an exception in the case of Edmundro. It is possible that Spen Valley will prove a stouter colt than Edmundro in their second season.

On the official estimate Spen Valley is the best two-year-old trained in Yorkshire. He is a fine big chestnut colt trained by Richard Pearce, the third of his generation to have occupied the Manor House at Middleham. His father was the worthy Matthew and his grandfather Dobson.

It could well be that Spen Valley will prove to be the best colt young Richard has had in his short career as a trainer.

GOOD REPUTATION

The policy adopted with the colt gives some idea of what was thought of him. He would not have run for races like the Champagne Stakes at Doncaster and the Middle Park unless he enjoyed a good home reputation. The sound Yorkshire policy is not to run horses out of their class.

It was only after a good race that Spen Valley went under to Russian in the Champagne, after which both colts were found to be coughing.

Spen Valley was still in the developing stage when he ran at Doncaster. He had lined down a lot when he ran at Newmarket — perhaps a little too much for my liking. That, of course, is just a personal opinion.

The pace was always too good for the Yorkshire colt in the Middle Park, but he is not really bred to be a two-year-old. He is by Precipitation out of Colombe by Colombo out of Path of Peace by Winalot, a son of Son-in-Law. The dam is brown and the sires and dams in the next two generations are all either bay or brown.

LIKE PRECIPITATION

Spen Valley is a chestnut, like his sire and, without suggesting there is much in the way of resemblance, the two-year-old is just such another as was Precipitation at the same age.

If Spen Valley develops as I anticipate during the winter he will be a commanding three-year-old, and it is at distances up to at least a mile and a half that I shall expect him to shine.

I doubt whether he has the speed to take him to the top class, but he should make much headway and prove a grand staying three-year-old.

Sam Armstrong's two-year-olds did not turn out as well as I expected, and Monterey was probably the best of them. Whether such will prove to be the case I do not know as I prefer to judge two-year-olds.

Not For Them

Blackpool assistant manager Sam Jones and international winger Bill Perry went to Amsterdam to welcome Perry's South African compatriot George Hauser, who the Johannesburg plane. Hauser has joined Blackpool from Capetown. The flags were flying and the bands playing when the Blackpool pair got to Holland, but the celebrations were not for them. Queen Juliana, and Prince Bernhard had just arrived from the East Indies.

Following LINDSAY HASSETT'S report on PT for Australian cricketers, comes a lesson from Denmark.

Now then, you lazy cricketers

By BRUCE HARRIS

ILLUSTRATION A: Pulling up with cross grip.

Imagine, if you can, a large and lumbering You-Know-Who of some English county cricket side, behaving like the gentleman in the illustrations in an attempt to get into condition to beat the Australians next summer.

I have never seen the like in touring our county grounds each spring time; but over in Denmark things are different. Mr. J. J. Hankinson, of Canford, who goes to that country every August to help the Danes in their cricket, has sent me a 4000-word booklet showing that the Danes intend to live laborious winter days.

They have commissioned Mr. Aksel Bjerregaard, a condition-training expert, to prescribe a series of exercises to make batsmen, bowlers, wicketkeepers and fieldsmen do their work without strain and tiredness. The booklet is his.

The Dansk Cricket-Forbund—otherwise the Danish Cricket Association—has a foreword which says with a hint of reproach:

"It has not been possible for us to obtain aid and inspiration from cricket's motherland, such as we have obtained in matters technical, as it seems that no one there has considered the question of physical training specially with an eye to the physical condition of the cricketer."

Some samples

Here are some sample exercises into which, I know, our county pros will plunge with alacrity:

"The head is turned sideways 90 degrees and pressed a little backwards... "Lie face down with the feet anchored under a heavy piece of furniture. Place the hands under the forehead. Now make a series of backward bends, forcing the head as far away from the floor as directly beneath the beam with chest as near to it as possible. . . . Do not overdo it at first."

The last sentence will be gladly accepted.

For "building up" leg and thigh muscles: "With legs wide apart, perform alternately right knee bend, left knee bend, as Illustration B. Bend the knee as deeply as possible, trying to sit on the foot of the bent leg. The other leg should be kept fairly straight, body upright and facing front. Repeat the exercise several times, then vary it by changing from one leg to the other without rising."

The Danes have "got something" here. I look forward to the day when our English side will go on an overseas tour without a trainer with power to order this and that of his.

Only then will our cricketers be 100 per cent instead of 90 per cent fit. (The body should be bent back so that the thighs hang

The Share Market—1955

A YEAR OF CHANGING FORTUNES

By A Special Correspondent

WHATEVER good omens the year of the goat ushered in, Hongkong investors in retrospect may fairly complain that they were conspicuously absent in the second half of the year.

For 1955 will go down in Stock Exchange history as one of the most extraordinary—and to the detached observer—one of the most fascinating it has ever experienced.

The two dominant influences were:

- ★ the huge influx of money to the Colony from various parts of Southeast Asia, and
- ★ the credit squeeze.

One built the boom, the other destroyed it. Hundreds made and lost fortunes as a result of them. The loans can only console themselves with the thought that the giddy pleasure of walking a tightrope is just not worth the trouble.

In addition to being an excellent year for the speculator, the investor will notice that the aggregate distribution this year (including bonus issues and dividends) was a record. And many shares reached new post-war peaks at the heights of the mid-year boom.

The Year Begins

If one were able to construct a graph of the market movements during 1955 it would look something like the one shown below. But this cannot be taken as an accurate representation because there are unfortunately no indices issued by the Stock Exchange.

The following review attempts to be a chronological account of the main events on the share market. But because it must necessarily include important company news which affected either the market as a whole or individual shares, certain details have been woven into the account of the market.

The year began with the market undisturbed and very firm. Under the impetus of a flood of immigrant money from Indonesia, Philippines and Vietnam, share values rose to the highest levels for years. Cements, for example, were then selling at $42 or double the peak price for 1953.

In January, the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank announced a one for four bonus issue, the first ever made by the Corporation. Prior to that its capital had been increased in four stages between 1883 and 1921 from $5 million to $20 million. The new issue raised capital to $25 million by the creation of 40,000 shares of $125 each.

Despite the encouraging effect this announcement had on the market, the upswing ended rather abruptly and a gradual recession began. Why?

Although there was an abundance of idle money in the Colony, many were reluctant to invest it in the share market because of the worsening of the situation in the Formosa Straits. There were almost daily dog-fights between the Nationalist islands and batteries on the Communist mainland and the following Communist invasion and capture of Yikiangshan, that a major clash might occur.

Formosa Fears

At about this time, it was disclosed that Mr. C. E. Marden had discussed with Government a $6½ million harbour bridge plan. The news, however, had little effect on ferry shares which, with other utilities, suffered proportionately smaller losses than the rest of the market. It was noted that there was little selling pressure, merely a reluctance to buy on the same expansive scale as at the beginning of the year and the end of 1954.

Doubt and fear over the Formosa situation and the execution of the Tachen islands continued to dominate the market in February. But towards the middle of the month, share prices began to pick up again with a number of dividend announcements in the offing.

Green Island Cement announced an increase in its distribution—from $2 in 1953 to $2.50 with a $1.50 bonus and a one for two bonus issue—for 1954. Soon after this, China Provident announced its bonus issue (one for four) and the Hongkong Hotel Company, having received its first instalment of $1.1 million for the sale of its Pedder Street site, paid a dollar dividend instead of 60 cents in the previous year.

A group of investors felt the dividend should have been higher and launched a cornering operation in the market with the object of gaining a controlling interest in the company to bring about a more liberal dividend policy. It did not succeed.

At the end of February, with the dividend season virtually over, lingering fears over the Formosa situation caused a further slide in share prices. There was a temporary lull in the flood of spare money coming to Hongkong. Profit-taking set in and share prices fell to a low ebb.

In March, Wheelock Marden & Co. Ltd. announced the transfer of control of one of the Colony's oldest utility companies, the Hongkong and China Gas Co. Ltd. from London to Hongkong, having acquired a majority of its shares on the London market.

Yaumatt Ferry Company announced a final dividend of $5 (against $4 for 1953) which, with a $3 interim, made $8 for the year. At the same time it announced its long expected bonus issue of one for two. Soon after Yaumatt and Star Ferry suffered a setback when Government announced that a British expert had come to the Colony to investigate the feasibility of a harbour tunnel scheme.

And Then The Boom

The big mid-year boom began in April. At the beginning of the month, Unions announced a one for nine bonus issue. And at about the same time U.S. Secretary of State, Mr. John Foster Dulles, clarified the Far Eastern policy by indicating that there would be no automatic commitment of American forces to the defence of the Nationalist-held offshore islands. At least this was the general interpretation of his statement.

The Bandung (also known as the Afro-Asian) conference followed soon after. At Bandung, Mr. Chou En-lai, the Chinese Prime Minister, proposed talks to settle its disputes with the United States and this move received a conciliatory response by President Eisenhower.

These developments helped to create a better atmosphere on the share market.

Another important factor in April was that inward remittances began coming in at a higher rate after a lull lasting over a month. The somewhat sudden resumption of remittances to Hongkong was largely the result of a political crisis in Saigon and the share market gathered momentum in May.

The Conservative win in the British General Election spurred demand for shares later in the month and another encouraging event was the release of the first American prisoners by Communist China.

Lethargy Sets In

Hongkong and Kowloon Wharf announced a distribution of $4 a share on the completion of the sale of some company property at Lanchow, but the market turned unexpectedly lethargic in June with a sudden stoppage of funds from Southeast Asia.

Later in the month, Hongkong Land and Investment Agency Co. Ltd. announced the purchase of Jardine's four-storey building on the corner of Pedder Street and Des Voeux Road for $8 million. At the same time, the Land company announced a new issue of 200,000 shares, one for five at $25 each.

And at about this time the reported loan repayments from Japan to Wheelock Marden were attracting considerable interest in the House Street and the shares made a good rise.

In July the boom mounted spectacularly with a resumption of inward remittances and many shares rose to their highest levels of the year. In this month the inflow of money to the Colony was described as "substantial".

The market was rising at such a rate that Banks put on $50 in one week. A number of other shares showed rises of almost $2 a week and the weekly turnover climbed to $14 million.

Optimism over the Geneva "summit" conference was an added spur to investment. And at about this time there was a growing feeling in the market that the Government would not proceed with the tunnel scheme and Star Ferry and Yaumatt were slightly more active.

Quite suddenly the blow fell. And it came in the last paragraph of an almost insignificant announcement by the Colony's leading British banks.

The Big Three—the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation and the Mercantile—announced they were raising interest rates on some advances by between one and three per cent a year in an attempt to curb inflationary tendencies in the Colony's economy.

This action was primarily designed to cut down borrowing for speculative share buying and to channel investment into more economically useful enterprises.

The main reason for the imposition of the credit squeeze was that the banks felt that the share boom could end up in a crash if there were any wide scale indication of borrowing falling to meet their obligations. The news caused a sharp downturn in prices. Immediate losses were in the region of five per cent. And the turnover fell from $14 million to $10.7 million in a week.

The weekly market turnover continued to fall, until by early September it was only $3.8 million. Share prices fell lower and two weeks after the announcement of credit restrictions they were about eight to ten per cent below their highs.

The fall lasted for about three weeks to a month and then the market began to even out. But it was noticeable that the operators who used to spend big money buying shares had deserted Ice House Street.

This was the second, biggest fall in Wall Street history. There was a sharp reaction on the Hongkong Stock Exchange. Brokers said the reason for this was that some saw the possibility of President Eisenhower retiring from politics and a change in American foreign policy in the Far East resulting from the change in leadership.

Dairy Farm cut its dividend from $1 to 60 cents (but it had made a new issue earlier of one for four) and Yaumatt announced a $2.50 dividend against a $3 one the previous year (it made a bonus issue of one for two earlier in the year). Both announcements came as a disappointment to the market.

At about this time there was a new bid to corner the market in Hotel shares. Different interests were involved this time, but the object was the same—to force the company to pay a bigger dividend.

Textiles passed their dividend but during the year it bought land, erected more buildings and increased its spindleage from 13,000 to 20,000 and the market feeling was that the company had consolidated its position and better results could be expected in the next financial year.

Star Ferry announced an unchanged $3.50 dividend and the Land dividend was an unchanged $2.

★ HOW SHARE PRICES MOVED ★

In August, also, Hongkong Electric announced the contract for the construction of its new generating station at North Point to the English Electric Co. Ltd. The value of the initial contract was about $25 million. The company hoped that the new plant would be in commission early in 1959 and the project as a whole, it felt, should be capable of meeting the power requirements of the island for the next 20 years.

Hotels shares were attracting further attention in August. This time when rumours began circulating that the Central Development Corporation was about to pay off its final instalment of $6 million, caused fluctuations between $19½ and $16.90 on one day.

In October, also, Wheelock Marden enjoyed a new burst of activity on hopes of a dividend increase.

But Wheelocks performance was a "solo" effort. It had the spotlight to itself. For in the weeks following the first instalment of the credit squeeze, the pattern of investment in the Colony had changed.

Speculators switched their millions to another booming market, land, and much more was going into land expansion. With yields at four, five and six per cent there was little interest in the share market. And banks were sending whatever idle money they had available to London to get the benefit of high discount rates on the money market. Also, remittances from Southeast Asia were not only "trickling in,"

Partly the aim of this move—like the earlier squeeze—was to channel investment into more economically useful enterprises, particularly industrial development.

There was also another factor: the raising of the borrowing rate had largely succeeded in damping speculation on the share market. The weekly turnover, it will be recalled, had fallen from a peak of $14 million late in July to less than $4 million and share prices had declined by between 15 and 30 per cent.

It was this situation which the Bank was concerned. For while share prices had fallen, yields had risen and if the market fell much further, it was felt that shares might rise to the point where they would again become attractive investments.

Sharp Criticism

At this stage the Bank felt, speculators might return seeking overvalued shares to finance purchases. To counter a large potential overdrive, it decided to impose a new restriction. On this news shares fell by as much as nine per cent and the move was sharply criticised by bankers and brokers.

But after the initial fall there was a slight recovery. Helped, brokers believed, by the timely announcement of a final dividend by China Light (up from 70 to 80 cents a share).

In December the market continued dull but share prices began a slow climb.

The new credit restrictions cut turnovers even lower and in one week business amounted to only $2.6 million.

The Wheelocks dividend (an unchanged 75 cents) and the publication of the accounts dashed the hopes of investors who had been looking for an interim dividend this year, but hopes were high that a higher final distribution might be possible.

And the market closed on a firm and steady note with share values approximately eight to 25 per cent below the year's highs.

The prospects for 1956 are, at this stage, rather hazy. But the prediction made by brokers earlier this month was that it would be a slow gradual recovery for the first few weeks.

Hongkong is unlikely to see such a tremendous influx of money from Southeast Asia next year because most South-east Asian countries have taken steps during the year to stop flights of capital.

This fact together with the existing credit restrictions (which may be applied with varying intensity next year as the situation demands) rather suggests that the share market in 1956 is going to look rather tame by the side of this year's market.

Some To Watch

In this event, it is hard to say which class of shares will be most favoured. As always, "blue chips" will be popular at any level. With the continued improvement in the Colony's trade, wharf and dock shares and particularly Provident should do better. And if activity in land investment falls—and it is difficult to see it keeping up at the present level throughout the year—land shares may lose some of their attraction.

But for the investor there is any number of good shares on the market at the moment at bargain prices and offering fairly high yields. Textiles and Nanyang may be worth watching next year, particularly the former in view of the expansion that has taken place.

Wheelock Marden, at their present rates are a good buy. Also any one of the "blue chips" with the exception of the ferry companies. I would prefer to hear Government's decision on the tunnel first.

These shares I hope to deal with in my reports in 1956. The year of the monkey in the Chinese calendar.

One can only hope this does not foreshadow a year of similar antics.

JOHN CLARKE'S CASEBOOK

OVERTIME AT CUT RATES

THERE were two courts sitting in Luton, the day I went there. At first I thought that might be just another manifestation of the town's exuberant prosperity, but both had plenty to keep them occupied, and I spent some time in each.

In the first, the day's work began with applications for extensions of drinking hours. There were so many of these that it seemed as though everyone in the town must be holding a party of some kind either on Christmas or New Year's Eve.

Weight-lifters were, so was a bank, and a domino league, and factories and football clubs, and the town's cleansing department.

WITHIN THE LAW
THEY all got their licences, costing five shillings, some at cut prices. Some got more licence than they had bargained for. "Any objection?" the chairman of the bench asked the police inspector when the first application for an extension to midnight on New Year's Eve, was made.

The inspector rose. "I should prefer," he said, "that this licence should not be granted until 12 o'clock, but made good until 12.15. People will want to drink the New Year in and I'd rather that were made legal."

I slipped into the other court. The four magistrates there all men, were hearing a case of stealing from a building site brought against a slim youth.

A police inspector was cross-examining the youth, with a remorseless eloquence and cogency that many counsel might have envied.

The case was found proved, the youth's record was called for.

"My character's as black as a chimney," he said. "I'm a person who's easily led," he cried with some passion, and burst into tears.

Before he was 12, he had been in court for wilful damage to houses, cruelty to animals, theft, and garage-breaking. Later, he went on to arson, sacrilege, and storebreaking.

OUT OF THE CRYING
BUT for some years the young man had kept out of trouble, had married, and now, between sobs, he told the court, he was an expectant father.

The bench retired, and after 10 minutes returned. The chairman, Mr. Herbert R. Waller, a businessman, and former High Sheriff, said to the youth: "We have made up our minds to send you to prison."

"Oh, no, no, no," the youth cried, and collapsed to his seat. "Stand up, and cut out the crying," said the chairman. "You're first class as several things—as an actor, as a liar, as a rogue."

"I said we'd made up our minds to send you to prison. But we wondered, if we gave you a chance, whether you'd act like a man?"

"Oh, yes, sir," the youth gulped, manfully.

He was put on probation for two years.

I went back to the other court. Up the steps into a dock that looked stronghold enough to house half a dozen desperate men with safety, a slip of a fair-haired girl was escorted by a policeman.

FENNELS
THE girl had been found trying to sleep out the night in a disused building. A penniless waif, 17 years old.

amidst all Luton's plenty. She had got herself into about as many difficulties as in her short life it was possible to.

"I learned my lesson all right in Holloway," the slip of a girl said. She had been remanded in custody. The chairman of the bench, a retired schoolmaster, Mr. Arthur Mander, spoke to the girl very quietly. "We are going to put you on probation," he said.

"And somewhere has been found for you to live. I hope things will be a lot happier for you in the future."

A vast thankful smile spread over the girl's face, and she was led from the formidable dock. It was as though she who had made herself outcast from the happy people about her, had been received back into their company and knew it, and was in love with the idea.

Egypt Gets More Arms

Colonel Fawzi "These weapons are being provided speedily and are helping to equip our land, sea and air forces in a way that will enable them, in the near future, to face up to any emergency."

Asked whether Egypt might enter some arrangement with Czechoslovakia for maintenance of the Soviet-type weapons it is receiving, the officer replied: "I will make a very simple comparison for the sake of clarifying this point, which has raised so much controversy. A watch is a very complicated machine and has many delicate components. But if you are careful and provide yourself with the necessary spare parts to assure its maintenance for its presumed span of life, then you need not worry that the watch may be discarded through a premature breakdown of any of its essential parts."

"We will use (the arms) only in self defence, not for aggression. The Czechs have strictly abided by the purely commercial nature of the arms deal."

"During my stay in Prague I have noticed that the Czech leaders have carefully avoided broaching any political topic. They always changed the subject when conversation veered toward Egypt's policies. We never discussed the question of Israel but the Czech newspapers always dealt our case and condemn Israeli aggressions on the Arab States," said Col Fawzi.

New Role For Bombay?

Bombay, Dec. 29.

Bombay may become the "commercial capital" of India under a new plan to solve the present stalemate over the city's future, reliable sources said here today.

They said the plan had been "virtually agreed" by the Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru, and the city's Chief Minister, Mr. Morarji Desai, at a secret meeting today at the suburban seaside villa where Mr. Desai is convalescing from an illness.

It is believed that under the plan a number of government ministries would be transferred from New Delhi to Bombay, including those of commerce and industry, natural resources, scientific research and part of the ministry of defence, including naval headquarters.

Most of the staff of the ministries of finance and works, housing and supply might also be moved.

Informed sources did not rule out the possibility that one session of the Indian parliament might be held every year in Bombay.—Reuter.

California Begins Recovering

San Francisco, Dec. 29.

California's greatest reconstruction job since the earthquake of 1906 got underway over three-quarters of the State today as bulldozers cleared away wreckage and debris to make way for new building projects.

Thousands of housewives were washing away tons of mud in a mid-winter housecleaning. Federal, State and County authorities surveyed water-torn bridges and highways to see what must be done to patch up the main arteries of travel.

California was digging out from underneath. The sun shone for the second day in a row and a prediction of still more fair weather sounded a cheering note in a dismal situation, but tragedy still lurked as the official death toll rose to 74-81 in California and 13 in Oregon.

At Verona, about 15 miles north of Sacramento, a crew of 400 men were reported winning a 20-hour battle to save a Canal levee which was the only thing holding back flood waters of the Feather River from rushing clear to the outskirts of the State capital. The State Engineers' office reported that the levee crews appeared to be winning their battle.—United Press.

SIDE GLANCES By Galbraith

"My husband has a virus—he's doing his work at home this week!"

In US, 1955 Became "Prosperity, Inc."

Washington, Dec. 29.

Two members of the American Cabinet today summed up 1955 as one of the country's most prosperous years on record and looked forward to an equally good, if not better 12 months ahead.

Mr. Sinclair Weeks, the Secretary of Commerce, described the present business situation as one of "general prosperity" and said "the chances are bright that 1956 will be another record year."

All sections of the population, except farmers, had increased their incomes, he added. The economic outlook was "clearly excellent" for the first half of the coming year but there was a possibility that the boom might subside somewhat in the latter six months of the year.

Mr. Weeks said in his summary of 1955: "The nation's total production of goods and services rose by $27,000 million to a total estimated at about $387,000 million."

After making allowances for price changes it appeared that actual production increased about six per cent in 1955 and was about four per cent higher than in 1953, the previous record year.

PERSONAL INCOME
Personal income shot up by $15,000 million to a total estimated at about $303,000 million, a new record. Spendable income—income remaining after payment of taxes—reached $209,000 million, six per cent more than in 1954.

The Secretary of Labour, Mr. James Mitchell, hailed 1955 as "the most satisfactory year for the American worker on record."

An average of 63 million persons were employed during the year and an unprecedented volume of goods and services was produced.

A separate Labour Department estimate estimated that 4,200 strikes caused 25 million man days of idleness in 1955—nearly 24 per cent above last year's figure but still the third best year since the end of World War II.—Reuter.

ALLEGEDLY ROBBED POLICEMAN

ACCUSED GIVES EVIDENCE

Evidence of how he was arrested by a Police detective and accused of having taken part in the robbing of Insp. K. H. Wheeler was given by Yeung Chi-yeung, when he testified at his trial before Mr. Justice J. R. Gregg at the Criminal Sessions this morning.

Yeung alleged that when the Police first arrested him, he was told that he had been suspected of returning from banishment, and it was only at the identification parade that he was accused of having taken part in the robbery.

Yeung is jointly charged with another accused, Choy Ching-kung, alias Mer Tsui, with having robbed Insp. Wheeler of a wrist watch, a cigarette lighter, a pair of tweezers, one Hong-kong dollar in coins, three grammes of heroin and five of barbitone, on August 2.

The offence is said to have taken place while complainant was taking a drug suspect to the Police Station.

Yeung faces an alternative charge of assaulting complainant and assaulting him actual bodily harm.

He is represented by Mr. Brook A. Bernacchi, instructed by Mr. P. C. Woo. Mr. W. S. Collier, Crown Counsel, is prosecuting, assisted by Det. Insp. A. Anderson. Choy is not legally represented.

ADMITS CONVICTIONS
Yeung testified this morning that he was an unemployed hawk living at No. 14, Second Street, first floor. As a boy, he was convicted on stealing and received the cane. He was convicted again of snatching and served a short sentence of imprisonment. He denied that he had committed the offence for which he was now on trial.

Early in April, Yeung continued, he was arrested in Eastern District in connection with an allegation concerning charging money for people to enter private land. He said he was released on bail in April and the case was heard on September 19, when he was sentenced by Mr. Bernacchi. Among the witnesses were two Police detectives, DPC Ho Kai-yun and DPC Liu Wai-hung. At the close of the evidence against him, he said, he was not called upon to offer a defence and was discharged.

Yeung said when he left the Court room, he saw DPC Liu looking at him and nodding his head. He was afraid that he might be arrested again and spoke to his counsel, Mr. Bernacchi, then told Yeung to leave the Magistrate with him in his car, taking at the same time another person as a witness of the incident.

Yeung said during the time he was released on bail, he had hawked in the old market in Western District.

Pickpockets Active
Four cases of larceny from the person were reported to the Police yesterday.

An American sailor had his pocket picked of a wallet, containing US$22, outside the Luk Kwok Hotel, Gloucester Road.

A Chinese girl had her jade bracelet snatched in the Kowloon City district. A Chinese boy has been detained in connection with the case.

A Chinese had his pocket picked of cash and papers at the Kowloon City bus terminus. Another Chinese had his fountain pen stolen in Castle Peak Road, Shamshuipo.

SHOULDER PATTED
At about 2 p.m. on September 20, Yeung continued, he left home and was joined by his cousin who invited him to tea. As they were walking down Curry Lane to Queen's Road, someone patted him on the shoulder and asked him when he had returned. The person was DPC Ng Hung, Yeung said.

Yeung asked the detective what he meant and Detective Ng said he suspected Yeung of being a returned banishment. Yeung said he had a Hongkong birth certificate but Ng refused to go to Yeung's home.

In the Police Station, Yeung was taken to Insp. Anderson and heard Mr. Telling. Anderson then told Yeung he had taken part in the robbery.

Yeung said he was then taken to another room where Ng told him not to be afraid and he was only suspected of being a returned banishment. He was later taken to the charge room and searched. A short while later, he was taken to an identification parade where he was told by the Police interpreter that he was suspected of taking part in a robbery. He was later identified by the European inspector and the police corporal.

Yeung said when he appeared on remand before a magistrate, he had seen Det. Liu on two occasions and Det. Ho on one occasion.

Hearing is continuing.

Fabricated Mother's Death Story

Two married women, Lee Dip, 32, and Chan Lai, alias Chan Ngau, 36, were remanded for one day for the record by Mr. F. X. D'Almada at Central this morning when they pleaded guilty to three counts of obtaining money by false pretences.

The Prosecution alleged that at 11.25 a.m. on December 28, defendants were collecting money from the occupants in Mount Davis Resettlement Area, saying that the mother of Chan Lai had died, and had no money to buy a coffin to bury the deceased. They did this by producing a bill in the name of the Kwong Fook coffin shop to support their story, but in fact the mother of Chan Ngau was still alive and the bill was printed from a chop made by the defendants.

Altogether defendants had obtained 50 cents from Leung Hing, one dollar from Leung Suk-mei, and 20 cents from Chan Suk-mei.

Robbed Doctor Of $2,400
A 20-year-old driver, Choy Tat-fu, of 95 Chun Yung Street, second floor, was sentenced to three months' imprisonment by Mr. Hin-shing Lo at Central this morning for simple larceny.

Dr. Wu Tat-pui reported to the Police that he had had $2,400 stolen from his office in Fadder Building, between December 24 and December 25.

Suspicion fell on defendant who admitted stealing the money. He told the Police that he had spent most of it, but was able to return $215.60 to complainant.
